Rivers and History, and Rivers of History

Thursday, February 22, 2018

4:30 - 6 p.m. | Humanities Center | Room 602

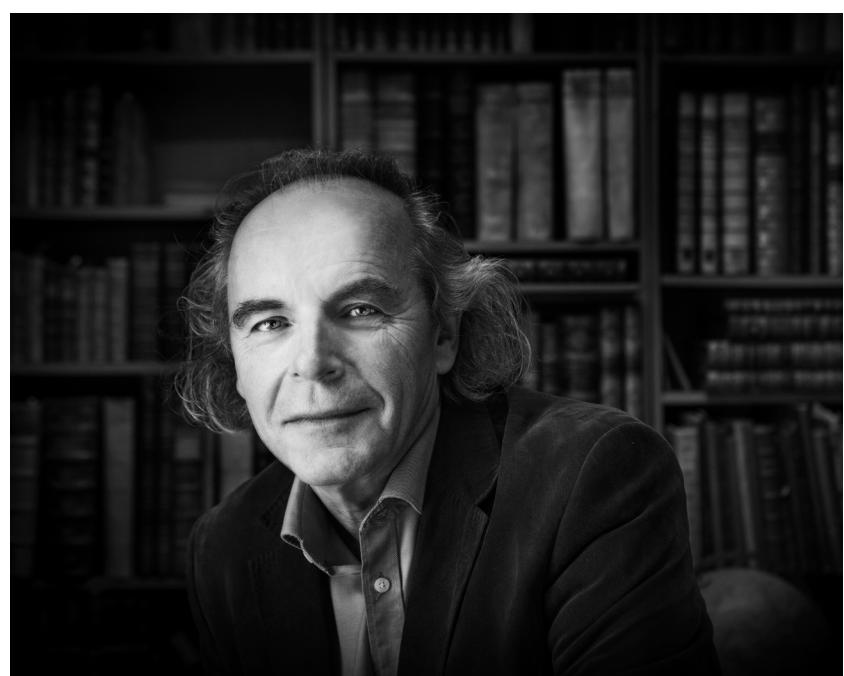

Cathedral of Learning | University of Pittsburgh

OPENING KEYNOTE LECTURE OF Modern Rivers of Eurasia: Potential, Control, Change

An International Symposium in the Environmental Humanities

Presented by the Center for Russian & East European Studies

The lecture will examine several examples of the very important but changing roles of rivers in history (the small Akerselva of Norway, the Derwent of England, the Indus, and the Huang He of China). Based on these cases, Tvedt will discuss modernization theories that dominated international discourse on development after World War II—theories that disregarded the role of water in historical developments.

Terje Tvedt is Professor in History and in Political Science, Department of Geography, University of Bergen. He is the author of numerous books and documentaries, including Water and Society: Changing Perspectives of Societal and Historical Development (I.B. Tauris, 2016), and A Journey in the Future of Water (3 episodes, TV2 and Panopticon, 2007). He has also published extensively on the Nile River, and is the editor of the nine-volume series A History of Water (2006-2016).
