

Reflection for Brendon's Activity:

Brendon's activity was an engaging experience that encouraged teamwork and effective communication. The activity involving the imaginary river was a unique and fun way to bring the class together as a cohesive team. Brendon's creativity shone through as he painted a vivid picture of the river and provided clear instructions.

During the first round of crossing the river using sheets of paper, our class learned the importance of collaboration. We communicated effectively and successfully helped everyone cross the river. However, it was the second round that truly challenged us. Brendon asked us to return across the river without any communication. Surprisingly, we still managed to understand each other's needs and coordinated our actions smoothly.

This activity made me realize the power of teamwork and effective communication, even in challenging situations. It aligns with the Bailey Scholars Program's emphasis on collaborative learning and understanding different perspectives. Brendon's activity not only brought us together as a team but also taught us valuable lessons about adaptability and the importance of non-verbal communication.

Reflection for Sam's Activity:

Sam's activity centered around a unique and thought-provoking experience that encouraged us to step out of our comfort zones and ask for help when needed. Sam asked us to close our eyes and navigate through a made-up maze, with the promise of finding the exit if we asked for help.

This activity was a powerful reminder of the significance of seeking assistance when necessary. It challenged our preconceived notions of independence and self-reliance. The realization that the exit itself was requesting help emphasized the importance of humility and reaching out to others.

Sam's activity connected with the Bailey Scholars Program's principles of self-awareness and personal growth. It encouraged us to reflect on our own willingness to seek help and recognize the value of collaboration. It also echoed the program's emphasis on understanding oneself and others through unique experiences.

In conclusion, Sam's activity provided an insightful perspective on the importance of asking for help when needed and demonstrated how personal growth can be achieved through shared experiences. It reinforced the idea that, in our journey of self-discovery and learning, we should always be open to seeking assistance and supporting one another. Sam's activity was a valuable addition to our Bailey community's ethos of collaboration and personal development.